112 organisations call on EU Climate Commissioner to ban fossil fuel lobbyists from EU delegations at COP29

Pia Engelbrecht-Bogdanov · Tuesday, November 5th, 2024

The letter below was submitted by Transparency International EU and the undersigned organisations to European Climate Commissioner Wopke Hoekstra.

To: European Climate Commissioner Wopke Hoekstra

CC: European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen

CC: European Commissioner-designate Teresa Ribera

Dear European Climate Commissioner Wopke Hoekstra,

Subject: excluding fossil fuel lobbyists from EU delegations at UN climate talks

We are writing to you about the oversized influence of the fossil fuel industry on climate change policy discussions and the need to ensure that oil and gas companies are not given privileged access to the climate negotiations.

The world has just experienced its hottest twelve months in history and across Europe record breaking heat waves followed by devastating floods have brought destruction and heartbreak to people in country after country. This was avoidable. But for too long those who profit from maintaining the current fossil fuel system have stopped, delayed or watered down actions to halt global heating. Their voices have dominated the conversation, including at the UN climate talks.

This November in Baku, governments will gather once more to try and further the goals agreed under the Paris Agreement and limit global temperature rises to 1.5oc. It is a chance for the EU to show global leadership and demonstrate the credibility of its commitment to transition away from fossil fuels.

That credibility is currently in question. Last year the EU and its Member States brought more than 130 fossil fuel lobbyists into COP28 on their delegations, according to analysis from the Kick Big Polluters Out campaign.

Your own team at the European Commission brought senior executives from BP and Eni into the talks, as well as ExxonMobil's chief lobbyist in Brussels. Would the EU bring tobacco lobbyists to a global health conference?

No, because the Framework Convention on Tobacco Control (FCTC) under the World Health Organisation (WHO), to which the EU is a signatory, explicitly recognises the fundamental and irreconcilable conflict between the commercial interests of the tobacco industry and those of public health officials. It even has guidelines for governments on how to protect policy making from undue influence. This includes not bringing tobacco lobbyists to international WHO negotiations and not asking them to speak at your events.

We believe it is vital to take a comparable approach to the fossil fuel industry and its fundamental and irreconcilable conflict of interest. The EU should not be bringing oil and gas lobbyists to COP29 or any future COP. It is no more reasonable to ask ExxonMobil and BP how to transition away from fossil fuels than it is to ask Phillip Morris how to quit smoking.

We, the undersigned, ask that you support measures that protect public policy making against the influence of fossil fuel lobbyists and, as a first step, commit to not providing registration at UN climate talks for executives or lobbyists of fossil fuel corporations, nor invite them to speak at events. This should be part of a broader EU-level conflict of interest framework.

Additionally, at the international level, we ask that you proactively support the UNFCCC secretariat in creating an Accountability Framework to protect the talks from undue influence of polluting interests.

The Fossil Free Politics coalition, made up of more than 200 organisations in Europe and around the world, would be happy to discuss the matter further before COP29, and will follow up once you are back from Baku.

Yours sincerely,

Nathan Stewart
