By 2034, power in the EU will be held to account for the common good.

The EU will work with civil society to tackle corruption, protect the rule of law, and end impunity.

Politicians and institutions will operate transparently and honestly. Companies will adhere to the highest standards of business integrity. Globally, the EU will lead by example, taking a values-driven, inclusive approach to achieve a world free of corruption.

Society is aware, engaged and supportive of these issues and taking action on the issue

Society engages in a constructive way to address corruption and challenges those who fail to act

Civic space is protected, and civil society has a place at the decision-making table

There is a shared understanding of what corruption is, how it affects people's daily lives, and what can be done about it

We campaign and advocate in coalitions and with partners to ensure there is a space for civil society action

Through our online platforms and traditional media relations, we raise awareness of EU political integrity and anti-corruption issues, with a view to generating public pressure for change

Effective policies and instruments are in place to address the issue

Sufficient resources are allocated to ensure policies are effective

Legislation is in place to tackle corruption, protect the rule of law, and end impunity

The EU institutions adopt adequate safeguards to ensure the transparency and integrity of the decision-making process

We demonstrate the relevance of corruption and transparency to new and politically salient areas of interest

We advocate for effective government regulation and application of those regulations

We identify issues and propose solutions to tackle corruption in politics and in business

EU institutions take a proactive attitude towards the issue and towards taking action

There is a willingness to challenge and sanction member states who don't comply

Legislation is effectively implemented and enforced at both EU and national level

EU policymakers understand the need to tackle corruption and know how to do it

We showcase and promote best practices to support the EU in setting global standards

We serve as a societal watchdog by monitoring processes and holding EU institutions to account

Through our research and analysis we help EU policymakers tackle corruption more effectively

TRANSPARENCY INTERNATIONAL EU

OUR ASSUMPTIONS

- The EU parliamentary cycle is the most useful way for us to think about change.
- We see the EU as a global and regional standard setter and a potential force for change.
- For us impact demands both effective policies and adequate enforcement.
- To bring about change, we need to understand and adapt to the political context.
- We measure our impact through qualitative rather than quantitative indicators

OUR FOCUS AREAS

POLITICAL AND INSTITUTIONAL INTEGRITY

FINANCIAL AND BUSINESS INTEGRITY

RULE OF LAW AND CIVIC SPACE
